KNOWLEDGE AND SKILLS

Communication is one of the most powerful media that play an increasingly central role in modern society, economics and politics, making English, the global communications language, more important than ever before. You will gain an understanding of the changing use of language and other forms of communication, and the ways in which they inform and influence contemporary society.

By the time you graduate from this programme, you will be able to:

- communicate professionally in English, within the context of journalism and the media;
- understand the theories and analytical techniques associated with linguistics, literature, culture and communication;
- apply your knowledge and skills to solve practical challenges and problems within the context of journalism and the media;

CAREERS

Graduates of this programme will be attractive employees in globalised workplaces and may be employed in journalism, broadcasting or advertising. Some may be employed as managers trainees in a variety of businesses, while others will start their careers in retailing, computing, and advertising. Some may be employed as professional translators or interpreters, or as a teacher of English as a foreign language. Additionally, the programme provides a foundation for further graduate level study in the subjects of English language, English literature and communications.
