

CALL FOR PAPERS

Forging the Future. Politics, Economics, and Society in Global Public Policy

Organizer: Xi'an Jiaotong-Liverpool University, Department of International Studies

Date: May 15th, 2026

Location: Xi'an Jiaotong-Liverpool University, South Campus, Industrial Park, Suzhou, China.

In an era marked by profound and rapid transformation, the international community is witnessing the emergence of new cross-border dynamics in areas such as security and cooperation, knowledge and technology transfer, and green and sustainable development. These developments highlight the pressing need to enhance the inclusivity, effectiveness, and legitimacy of global policy mechanisms.

This conference brings together scholars, policymakers, and practitioners to explore how global public policy can tackle unprecedented challenges that transcend national borders and defy unilateral solutions. We aim to foster a multidisciplinary understanding of global policymaking to shape a more equitable and effective international framework.

This Call for Papers invites original contributions that examine the political, economic, and social dimensions of providing global public goods while addressing global policy issues from diverse perspectives such as political science, political economy, economics, sociology, and related fields.

We welcome submissions on the following topics, including but not limited to:

Topic 1: Global Policy for International Relations, Cooperation and Security – Examining political frameworks that foster international cooperation and stability, with a focus on global public goods such as security, non-proliferation, and multilateral approaches to conflict resolution.

Topic 2: Global Policy for Open and Shared Development – Discussing economic policies that promote equitable growth and openness through mechanisms such as technology transfer, knowledge sharing, fair trade, and inclusive financial systems.

Topic 3: Global Policy for Social and Environmental Sustainability – Exploring social and collaborative pathways toward a sustainable global future, addressing challenges such as poverty reduction, climate change mitigation, and resilient development.
