

International Position and Influence of China's Development

Huang Langhui

Abstract

When looking on the past, we can see that China has spent less than 70 years going through a process of development that took western developed countries more than 300 years and has made astonishing achievements especially during the reform and opening-up in the past four decades. In order to realize the grand strategic target of great national revival of China successfully, China has to precisely recognize its position and role in the world, and to consider carefully on how to make best use of its advantages and bypass its disadvantages, and to meet the upcoming challenges in an objective and imperturbable way.

First, in terms of “hard power,” this report will summarize China's achievements, international position and contribution to the development of global economy based on reliable and detailed data. Second, in terms of “soft power,” the report will describe Chinese policies and projects, Chinese wisdom and power, and the increasingly global influence in China's efforts to contribute to world peace and human progress through its active participation in the reform of international governance system. In the end, the report will analyze and conclude the experience of success in Chinese development in terms of the advantages of China political system and national top-level design. However, we should not be complacent over the achieved success or even become conceited.

Key Words

Chinese reform and opening-up policy, China's development, Global contribution, International position, International influence, China's voice in the world affairs